Advice for Family & Friends

If you have a loved one who is addicted to gambling, coping with their behaviors can be exhausting. The first thing you need to know is that it is not your fault, it is theirs. You can’t make them acknowledge their problem or get them to stop, but what you can do is just be there for them.

Gambling can take a toll on your relationship with the gambler. In this situation, you need to let the person know how their gambling is negatively impacting your life as well. Let the person know that you want to help them, and that you are there as support.

Protecting Yourself & Your Family’s Finances

Most people who have a gambling problem, tend to have a hard time handling money. In order to help protect yourself and your family from financial burden, here are a few suggestions:

- Ask a professional for help on how to protect your family’s assets
- Do not lend the gambler any money or pay off their debt
- Remove your name from any joint accounts shared with them
- Make sure that you are checking the mail yourself for bills
